

711.426.1

P r e s s e release

August 13, 2020

Berlin police refuse to clarify questionable queries in police databases

The Berlin Commissioner for Data Protection and Freedom of Information, Maja Smoltczyk, complains that the Berlin police have violated their legal obligation to Cooperate in verifying queries of personal data in Police databases linked to right-wing extremist death threats could.

The reason for the procedure was the complaint of a person whose home was threatened

"9 mm for [...]. headshot" was written. This person was a suspected victim before right-wing violence. At our request, the police confirmed police access to the Data of two data subjects. The police were only able to carry out some of these accesses justify in a comprehensible official manner. Nevertheless, the police said in general that no

There are indications of official inquiries that cannot be justified. the subsequent

The demand to justify the previously incomprehensible data retrieval came

Police despite several reminders and a direct letter to the chief of police, in which again, particularly in view of the political scope of the suspicion urgently asked for the necessary information, not after. To date are therefore the data queries in question by Berlin police officers are unclear.

The police justify the refusal to provide information to our authorities

Procedural rights of the police officers concerned and doubts the sufficient Substantiation of the complaint received by the data protection supervisory authority.

In doing so, she fails to recognize that these objections are not relevant for the data protection examination

Role-play. A data protection check aims to identify possible structural identify problems in order to, if necessary, arrange for suitable technical organizational measures to ensure the security of personal data or increase and thus prevent or largely limit unauthorized data retrieval minimize.

For the supervisory examination of the basic handling of the police as an institution data protection regulations, there is no fault on the part of individual employees at.

As an authority, the police make their right to refuse information their own only individuals are legally entitled to in investigations conducted against them. Followed According to this argument, the data protection supervisory authorities could do almost nothing

Responsible: Dr. Philip Straw

Office: Cristina Vecchi

Email: presse@datenschutz-berlin.de

Friedrichstr. 219

10969 Berlin

Tel: 030 13889 - 900

Fax: 030 2155050

- 2 -

Investigations more with the police as the responsible body within the meaning of data protection law carry out.

In doing so, the police are violating their data protection laws laid down in the Berlin Data Protection Act Obligations to provide all necessary to fulfill the statutory duties of the Data protection supervisory authority required information and against the obligation with our authority to cooperate.

The criticism of this extremely irritating behavior of the Berlin police is the sharpest Means that the Berlin legislature of the Berlin data protection supervisory authority at hand has given. If the police do not respond to the complaint either, the Berliner

Data protection officer the process to the responsible committee of the House of Representatives submit and report there.

Maja Smolczyk:

“The Berlin police authorities have revealed their stubborn refusal to cooperate a questionable understanding of the law. The complete clarification of the present as well as Comparable threats is also in the interest of law enforcement agencies that are currently due the increasing number of cases of unlawful data requests and contacts right-wing extremist spectrum are in the public eye. All public offices of State of Berlin are obliged to work with my authority as the supervisory authority for data protection to work together. Should a body evade these obligations as vehemently as it does is the case here, this must also be a political issue.”