Cross-national examination: approvals

Media company websites are mostly ineffective - corrections required

Andreas Schurig: "Saxon media providers have to be active become!"

The data protection supervisory authorities of several German states have

Media company websites regarding the use of cookies and the integration of third-party services is examined. Total were based a joint test catalog tested 49 websites in 11 countries.

The focus was on user tracking for advertising purposes. Most of the checked websites do not meet the legal requirements for the use of cookies and other tracking technologies. The Media companies are thus violating the rights of their users users to protect their personal data. Also first adjustments the legal deficits have not yet been able to be addressed by some of those responsible eliminate completely.

For users, there is the practice of media companies a significant risk. The data collected as part of user tracking personal data

especially to create and Enrichment of comprehensive and cross-site personality profiles used. These are used for online marketing, especially in real time

Bidding process (real-time auction of advertising space) used.

The state data protection authorities involved have an effect on the companies their area of responsibility to ensure data protection-compliant conditions to manufacture. If necessary, they will take regulatory action seize.

For the coordinated investigation, the authorities from Baden-Württemberg, Brandenburg, Bremen, Hamburg, Hesse, Lower Saxony, North Rhine-Westphalia, Rhineland-Palatinate, Saarland, Saxony and Schleswig-Holstein from mid-August 2020 a jointly developed Questionnaires to media companies in their respective areas of responsibility. Checked were not all websites of the companies, but their widest-reaching offers. Even before the questionnaires are sent investigation results.

A very high number of cookies and third party services

used,

serve advertising financing.

The websites usually ask for differentiated consent from the users and users for the use of cookies and third-party services. In the majority of cases, however, these consents are not effective.

The main deficiencies identified during the audit were:

which is mainly used for user tracking and ❑ Incorrect order: Third-party services that require consent are often already integrated when the website is opened and cookies are set - so ahead of time the consent request.

❑ Missing information: On the first level, the consent banner will be displayed moreover, insufficient or incorrect information about user tracking given.

❑ Insufficient scope of consent: Even if the user has the option perceives everything already on the first level of the consent banner to refuse, numerous cookies and third-party services remain active, one require consent.

❑ No simple opt-out: While all consent banners on the first level there is a button with a consent to All cookies and third-party services can be granted is missing at this level often an equally easy way to do that consent-requiring Reject user tracking in its entirety or the banner without a decision to be able to close.

❑ Manipulation of users: The design of the Consent banner exhibits numerous forms of nudging. That means, Users are subliminal to give their consent urged by the consent button, for example, by a colored highlighting is designed much more conspicuously than the button to Reject or by unnecessarily complicating the refusal of consent becomes.

The Saxon Data Protection Officer Andreas Schurig explains:

“Many people use the websites of Saxon media companies every day. cookie

Banners and the integration of third-party providers sometimes cause uncertainty.

I keep getting complaints about this. My regulator scrutinized for data protection. Nor are the procedures and the Exchange with those responsible not completed. At this point in time itself

However, it can already be stated that the tested websites still have

Need for improvement in the design of the consent solutions, the data transfers and the transparency of the offers for users.”
