New guidance on data protection as a criterion in the award procedure

Munich, April 27, 2023

Everyone knows that careless consumer decisions can cause lasting trouble. A-

Buyers in Bavarian state authorities or municipalities can use this everyday experience in Sometimes unexpectedly "refresh" your professional life. But it is often more expensive than with one

Vacuum cleaner mistake - if, for example, an expensive IT service is procured, but later turns out that it may not be used at all for data protection reasons.

Many services and products that Bavarian public bodies procure have references on data protection and must comply with relevant legal requirements as well as supplementary meet technical and organizational standards. The course for (also) data protection fair product are provided in the course of the procurement process.

Prof. Dr. Thomas Petri: "Effective data protection work focuses on prevention.

And sometimes it has to take effect early, long before a person responsible can start productively with the processing of personal data begins. I am therefore particularly pleased to

to be able to present the decision-making aid 'Data protection as a criterion in the award procedure'."

The 43-page paper shows, taking into account the most recent practice in awarding chambers and courts systematically which "gateways" are in procurement processes open to data protection requirements and how to use them effectively. It deals among other things, also with the legality requirements of the particularly practical axis-relevant award of cloud services. data protection law and public procurement law shown consistently in the network. The paper is equally aimed at people with this like that technical focus.

Prof. Dr. Thomas Petri: "I hope my new guide can contribute to that Public procurement law and data protection law will be discussed even more than before. that

Creation processes are consistently geared towards data protection-compliant services, is an indispensable prerequisite for economical and economical use of funds."
