If people want to talk about informational self-determination, they can use 18 short videos and eleven worksheets for this, which the initiative "Data protection goes zur Schule (DSgZS)" together with the data protection supervisory authorities in Bavaria, Baden-Württemberg, Hesse and Thuringia as part of the "Data Protection goes to school". The working materials were last in the headquarters Mundo education database included. The spokesman for the initiative Rudi Kramer is pleased about the recognition for the work in the interest of the schools: "We see confirms us on our way to teachers in their everyday work support and to make our knowledge available in a professional and age-appropriate manner."

The videos have a length between about 1:30 minutes and almost 6 minutes treat, for example, the basics of data protection, such as profiling, which data can be processed by smartphones and why passwords are important.

The worksheets can also be easily edited online as a PDF document, so that unnecessary printing is eliminated.

The senior official at the state commissioner for data protection and Freedom of information Baden-Württemberg Dr. Jan Wacke says: "Young people move completely naturally in the digital world. We offer with these Videos give you the opportunity to get to grips with important topics in an uncomplicated and direct manner
