Data protection officers from Berlin and Rhineland-Palatinate are showing unfounded attacks the informational right of self-determination back - Smoltczyk and Kugelmann: Der

Data protection is a European success story

In an opinion piece, the Berlin Commissioner for Data Protection and Freedom of Information, Maja Smoltczyk, and the Rhineland-Palatinate State Commissioner for the Data protection and freedom of information, Prof. Dr. Dieter Kugelmann, against the youngest Attacks on privacy. "The pandemic shows how privacy is a scapegoat to be used when things go wrong. Not a day goes by without it being said that the pandemic is easy to get under control if we only protect data protection trimmed down," said the data protection officers of Berlin and Rhineland-Palatinate.

The direction and undertone of a series of contributions to the social debate would give cause to great concern and important facts were not sufficiently recognized.

"It is not a problem that the health authorities are still not all digital infrastructure are connected. The problem is not that US services want to reserve the right to use children's data for their own, mostly commercial, purposes process. Instead, it is claimed that the data protection officers make learning easier for the children want to ban."

Data protection does not stand in the way of social challenges, say Smoltczyk and Kugelman. It's about the achievements of digitization and the civic Fundamental rights, which are the basis of our free and democratic society protection. "Data protection is not a super fundamental right that stands above other fundamental rights, but it is a fundamental right. And as a fundamental right, it is in a state of constant rebalancing Interaction with the other fundamental rights. That the decision-makers are not concerned with that making it easy is a good thing, because a free state based on the rule of law makes this a requirement, also and especially in times of crisis."

Smoltczyk and Kugelmann emphasize: "Adequate data protection must not prevent the virus fall victim. Data protection is not an obstacle, but an important regulator and control factor. It contributes to acceptance and trust in the population. The Data protection standard in the European Union, which is being imitated worldwide, must be considered a success to be celebrated. You can be proud of this success."
