

Some public bodies are now considering using the pandemic-related ad hoc solutions for video conferencing as a permanent tool.

Recently, the Saxon data protection officer has received increasing numbers of inquiries from public authorities about video conferencing systems. This is often associated with considerations of using the pandemic-related ad hoc solutions permanently as administrative tools. Read the article about the use of video conferencing systems to find out what data protection law requires.