training rules on the Internet.

dr Stefan Brink, State Commissioner for Data Protection and freedom of information Baden-Württemberg: "Digital media agree significantly

everyday

from

and youngsters. Our speakers go to schools, to deal with the young people about the huge opportunities, but also to talk about the risks of digital technologies.

The response was always great - we are happy to share our sen on and look forward to the many questions that young people face us."

During their lessons, the employees of the recording supervisory authorities on the material of "Privacy goes to School" back, the further development of which is also supported by klicksafe and financially supported by the DATEV Foundation Future was supported.

"The support of the regulator helps us a lot, our Mission for the protection of personal data continues in the to wear in classrooms. The more attention we pay to that subject of security in the network, the more reconnaissance work we can do in the end. For that we are very grateful-bar," emphasizes Rudi Kramer, spokesman for the initiative.

Due to the pandemic, on-site operations at schools were albeit severely restricted. To even without going to school to be able to deliver suitable impulse lectures, the otherwise

Topics explained in the classrooms in short videos implemented. "Data protection - easily explained" is what it's called in the format released in January. "The short video clips can used independently by the schools. So are we more independent of personal school visits, but offer sufficient information at the same time," explains Rudi
